You know the dangers of latching onto the first tempting offer that comes along. Sometimes you find yourself hooked into a deal that leaves you struggling for a way out. And you have to be especially careful in the public entity insurance market.

There is a relatively new trend in public entity insurance that may catch your eye. Namely, creating a strategic alliance with other public entities to pool resources and become self-insured.

Certainly this is a very attractive and viable option for some government and educational entities. However, pursuing it can take you into deep waters – waters that should only be navigated if you are in good company. In addition to risk management, you need experience in fund management and these type of strategic alliances.

You may be baited by newcomers to the market, dangling the promise of cost savings. Or perhaps you are lured into a deal by some other public entity that is pulling together their own patch-work program. Regardless of the source, you owe it to yourself to compare with the industry leader in public entity insurance – Coregis.

Coregis is the only national insurer 100% dedicated to public entity coverage. Thousands of cities, municipalities, schools and special districts have come to Coregis for our experience – spanning 25 years. This experience is what you need to chart a safe course through the deep waters of the self insured.

You can also find comfort knowing your deep-water companion has the strength to stand up to the mightiest threats. Now owned and operated by a company (GE Capital) with Standard & Poors highest rating of “AAA,” Coregis itself maintains lofty ratings of “A+” by Standard and Poor’s and a rating of “A” by A.M. Best.

While others are heading for the shallows and dropping out of the business, Coregis is building on its leadership position. Now with the added financial and managerial resources of GE Capital behind it, Coregis is expanding its portfolio of products and services to provide unmatched protection, service and value.
